SWA provided landscape architectural services for the Camino Medical Group's new clinic, transforming an old brownfield site into a green healing oasis.

The landscape along the property edges provides a continuous green street canopy, and a system of natural swales softens the transition from the road to the upper level of the garage. Three main entry areas are identified to provide both pedestrian and vehicular access to the building. Abundant outdoor spaces are afforded for patients and staff to mingle and rest, making use of hedges, planters, walls, and seat walls to create a sense of privacy and shelter.

In the site's tranquility garden, a curved wall of stacked stone and trickling water adds texture and sound, providing a relieving visual and acoustic experience for the patients of the infusion department.
